Boil-water advisory ends for Kalama residents

OLYMPIA — A boil-water advisory ended today for about 500 people in Kalama. The water has been tested and is considered safe to drink.

The state Department of Health issued the advisory on Friday because the city's water treatment plant had lost some of its capacity to treat water due to flooding. The advisory affected only part of the community.

Meanwhile, there are still about a dozen water systems in the state under boil-water advisories or out of water due to last week's storms. The Department of Health and local health partners are providing these systems the help they need as they work to assure their water is safe to drink as soon as possible.
